119 (1956). Resolution of 31 October 1956

The Security Council,

Considering that a grave situation has been created by action undertaken against Egypt.

Taking into account that the lack of unanimity of its permanent members at the 749th and 750th meetings of the Security Council has prevented it from exercising its primary responsibility for the maintenance of inter-national peace and security,

Decides to call an emergency special session of the General Assembly, as provided in General Assembly resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950, in order to make appropriate recommendations.

Adopted at the 751st meeting by 7 votes to 2 (France, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland), with 2 abstentions (Australia, Belgium).

We were all horrified by what was going on the ground. We felt impotent to stop it. We were deeply distressed, yes, but again I must insist that what you are saying is that we should have saved Rwanda from itself, in the words of the Secretary General - it was Rwandese who planned the genocide, it was Rwandese who carried it out. It was Rwandese who, sadly, were the victims. We happened to be there on a peacekeeping mandate. Our mandate was not to anticipate and prevent genocide.

Our people on the ground; as I said, they are lightly equipped troops under a very courageous commander; they did the best they could. They saved lives. When the killing actually started, they could not save every life in Rwanda.

The Persian Gulf War made the Security Council feel the glory of its own strength. The dramatic ejection of the Iraqis from Kuwait gave the Security Council an exciting confidence. The Persian Gulf expanded the horizon of the Security Council and, in fact, made election to it one of the grand prizes of UN membership.

The Gulf War, however, also had a troublesome side for the UN. The Security Council realized its potential and achieved the most when the United States decided to lead it. Americans acted as if the UN were their UN and at the slightest hint that it might not be theirs alone, Americans tended to turn their backs on the United Nations and shun it.

With the Security Council blocked by Anglo-French vetoes, the General Assembly authorized a UN Emergency Force (UNEF I). The UN Emergency Force was the first major peacekeeping force to be set up by the UN. The situation in the Middle East in 1956 called for creative diplomacy: an enforcement force on the Korean model was impractical because of the involvement of the two Permanent Members of the Security Council with veto powers. The force had overseen the establishment of a cease-fire and the withdrawal of the adversaries and helped to maintain stability between the two countries. In all these areas, it can be judged a success.

The UN's success was dependent on the support of the superpowers, or in certain cases, their indifference. Often the UN had little choice but to remain 'passive' in the face of Soviet or U.S. aggression. In addition, when the UN did get involved in 'peacekeeping' operations it often had a negative impact on relations between the USA and USSR. Peacekeeping missions often aggravated the tensions between the Soviets and the Americans.

There was a generally accepted view that the Cold War had held the UN hostage and frustrated its ability to function effectively. However, this perception may have been an exaggeration, as during the post-Cold War era the UN has had similar problems of controlling the domination of the USA, and has shown itself limited in achieving collective security through military action. Perhaps the Cold War was a 'smoke-screen' and the fundamental weakness of the United Nations is, and always was, the unwillingness of states to hand over some degree of sovereignty to an international organization.

Adapted from Rogers and Thomas, '20th Century World: The Cold War', 2008.

Now answer the following question.

How far do Sources A to E support the view that UN peacekeeping has been successful from 1945 to 2000?

Section B

You must answer 3 questions from this section

2. Assess the view that USSR's foreign policy was more of national security than the USA's in the period 1945 to 1955.
3. "The masses, not the leaders ended the Cold War." How far do you agree?
4. How far do you agree with the view that US dominance accounted for the development of the international economy from 1945 to 2000?
5. "China's economic growth from 1978 to 2000 was primarily due to the policies of economic liberalization." Discuss.
6. To what extent did the rise of religious fundamentalism affect the intractability of the Kashmir conflict?
